Art + Feminism
WIKIPEDIA EDIT-A-THON @ TUJ

MARCH 8
FIRST WAVE / 11AM-2.30PM
SECOND WAVE / 3-6PM

Wikipedia’s issues with gender are well-documented.

Let’s change that.

JOIN US for an international communal updating of Wikipedia entries on art and feminism. Bring your laptop and ideas for entries that need creating or updating.

EVERYONE is welcome! People of all gender identities and expressions are invited to participate.

Why are we here? We’re here because less than 10% of editors on Wikipedia are women.

Wikipedia is the largest and most popular general reference work on the internet with more than 40 million articles in more than 250 different languages. The fact is when we don’t tell our stories or participate in the ways our history is preserved, it gets erased. Gaps in the coverage of knowledge about women, gender, feminism, and the arts on one of the most visited websites in the world is a big problem and we need your help to fix it.

Join Art History and Art Program professors Deanna MacDonald, Mayu Tsuruya and Louise Rouse for a day of action.

LISTEN to talks about art and feminism.

LEARN how to edit Wikipedia.

WRITE about Japanese women artists and international women artists in the language you feel most comfortable.

EVERYONE is welcome! People of all gender identities and expressions are invited to participate. And even if you don’t have time to edit, please stop by and show your support.

WHAT TO BRING

- Register for a Wikipedia account so you can start to edit faster on the day
- Your ideas for new articles, translations of existing articles or articles that can be extended.
- A laptop (A limited supply of laptops will be available at the event but we recommend you bring your own)
